Conclusion

Burton A. Bargerstock

Founded in 1897, the primary objective of the Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi is the recognition and encouragement of superior scholarship in all academic disciplines. The society believes that by recognizing and honoring those persons of good character, who have excelled in scholarship, others will be stimulated to similar goals of excellence.

Deborah Johnson

Deborah Johnson's research explores racially and culturally related development, parental racial socialization and coping, and cultural adjustment from early childhood through emerging adulthood in both domestic and international children and youth. Racial-ethnic identity development and the use of coping skills as protective mechanisms of African American and other children in diverse settings has been one of her central interests. Another focal area has been the ongoing cultural adjustment of Sudanese refugees, where she has emphasized themes of resilience, such as identity as resilience and sense of purpose as resilience. Her current work focuses on the influence of early bias preparation and coping at the intersection of gender and race among African American and Latina college women, and the impact on their well-being and school performance. She continues to work with South Sudanese refugees, focusing on gender as well as tridimensional aspects of identity alignment, resilience, and adjustment processes, while moving toward use of a national assessment of resettled South Sudanese. Other projects include the exploration of relations among identity and racial socialization in varying global contexts where social history and current public policy impact the experience of oppression. This research includes Indigenous Australians and Roma youth from Bulgaria, where she and her colleagues recently revised and translated their racial-ethnic socialization measure into Bulgarian. Her most recent book focuses on her international research of cultural adjustment and vulnerable children (Deborah J. Johnson, DeBrenna Agbényiga, & Robert Hitchcock (Eds.). (2013). Vulnerable Children: Global Challenges in Education, Health, Well-Being, and Child Rights. New York, NY: Springer).

Rubén O. Martinez

Rubén O. Martinez, Ph.D., is professor of sociology and director of the Julian Samora Research Institute at Michigan State University. His research interests include institutional and societal change, neoliberalism and Latinos, education and ethnic minorities, diversity leadership in higher education, youth development, Latino entrepreneurship, and environmental justice issues. Dr. Martinez is the editor of the Latinos in the United States book series with the Michigan State University Press.

He has published several books and recently co-edited a volume titled Occupational Health Disparities among Racial and Ethnic Minorities: Formulating Research Needs and Directions and a special issue of Diálogo on Latin@s in the Midwest. He is currently working on a special issue of Social Justice focusing on neoliberalism and public higher education.

Robin Miller

Robin Lin Miller received her Ph.D. in community psychology from New York University, with a minor in quantitative methods. She is currently professor of ecological-community psychology at Michigan State University and vice-chair of its social science and education institutional review board. Miller has 25 years of experience evaluating HIV prevention and care programs in community-based and clinical environments. Prior to assuming an academic career, she directed program evaluation services at the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York City. During that 7.5 year period, she designed and conducted evaluations of diverse prevention programs for gay and bisexual men and of care programs for persons living with HIV. Since moving to an academic position, she has continued to evaluate HIV prevention and care programs, especially those targeting Black gay and bisexual youth. She also studies the long-term use of evidence-based principles and practices in AIDS-related service settings. In pursuing both areas, she has maintained an overarching research interest in evaluation theory, methods, and practice, and, in particular, how evaluation theories are used. Her most recent evaluations include a prospective meta-evaluation for the U.S. PEPFAR Caribbean Regional Program and an evaluation of the long-term health consequences of ex-offender re-entry assistance services for persons living with HIV. With colleagues from the Adolescent Trials Network, she is evaluating several multisite programs for adolescents, including a project that links HIV-infected youth to care and another project that mobilizes communities to create structural change. Dr. Miller is an elected Fellow of the Society for Community Research and Action and the American Psychological Association. She is a member of the Board of Directors of the American Evaluation Association and serves the Association in multiple roles, including chair of the Publications Oversight Working Group, Evaluator Competency Task Force member, and Cross-disciplinary Task Force member. In the past, she has also served as AEA's annual conference chair and editor of the American Journal of Evaluation. Further, she is a past recipient of the American Evaluation Association's Marcia Guttentag Early Career Award and the 2011 recipient of its Robert Ingle Award honoring service to the profession of evaluation.

— INVITED PRESENTATIONS —

Karl Gude

Karl Gude is the director of the Media Sandbox in the College of Communication Arts and Sciences, a program that mixes students with various interests and abilities to collaborate on real-world challenges. Gude is the former director of information graphics at Newsweek magazine and the Associated Press. Gude also teaches a 500-student Media Sandbox class on creative thinking and problem solving.

In 2017, Gude received the Quality in Undergraduate Teaching Award and was also featured in the President's Report about teaching creativity. In 2013, Gude was recognized with the Faculty Impact Award by his college. Gude has presented at TEDx Detroit, Lansing and Midland and has spoken twice at the South by Southwest (SXSW) technology conference on the "Power of Visual Storytelling." Gude recently gave a talk at the "Political Analytics Conference" at Harvard University and is just wrapping up a National Science Foundation grant where he collaborated with several universities on an evolutionary biology project.

Gude is an avid sketch artist, cartoonist and painter who also writes a column for the Huffington Post. He is a visual storyteller who consults with corporations, PR and news organizations, academic and scientific institutions, and government agencies to help them (1) solve complex problems using creative thinking tools and (2) create more effective and engaging infographics. During his time working as an infographics journalist, Gude covered major news events including seven presidential elections, a slew of wars, sporting events, natural disasters, science, medical and technical advancements, and breaking news, such as the attack on the World Trade Center.

Love of Learning Award

Allison Grathoff

Bio not available

Kellee Coviak Hansen

Kellee Coviak Hansen has been selected as a recipient of Phi Kappa Phi's Love of Learning Award, which she used to help fund her presentation at the annual American Music Therapy Association conference in November 2017.

Hansen works as the founder and executive director of CODA Music Therapy Services, LLC, in Lansing. She has devoted herself to the study and execution of music therapy, specializing in music therapy within special education, early childhood developmental music, and medical music therapy. She is involved in the leadership of numerous professional organizations in her field, and is currently serving her second term as president of the Michigan Musical Therapists.

Hansen graduated from Michigan State University with bachelor's degrees in music education and music therapy. She went on to receive her master's in special education from the University of North Dakota in 2015. She currently resides in Lansing with her husband, son, and cat. She is an avid Spartan fan and frequently attends football and basketball games.

Xuehong (Stella) He

Xuehong (Stella) He has been selected as a recipient of this year's Love of Learning award. She is currently a doctoral student in the Second Language Studies program studying Chinese vocabulary in computer assisted self-study environments. In her research, she explores the effects of working memory and presentation formats on learner attention and outcomes. She will use the funds to cover expenses during the data collection process of her dissertation research.

He was born in Guangdong Province, China. She completed her bachelor's degree in mainland China at Sun Yat-Sen University, then received her master's in applied linguistics at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University.

Study Abroad Grant

Melissa Eggleston

Melissa Eggleston was selected as a recipient of the 2017 Study Abroad Grant. She used the funds to attend an international studies in horticulture course, The History and Future of Horticulture in the United Kingdom.

In May, 2017, Eggleston embarked on a two-week study journey exploring horticulture in the United Kingdom. Her program took her to London, central England and Northern Ireland where she explored gardens, toured greenhouses, and participated in a service project at the Bishop's Palace in Waterford, Ireland.

Eggleston is a senior in the Horticultural Science program studying horticulture with a minor in agribusiness management. She hopes to become a greenhouse grower after she graduates. When she is not spending her time in the greenhouse or working as the treasurer for the Student Horticulture Association, she enjoys reading, baking, and bookkeeping.
